PER CURIAM:

I.

The facts of this case, as found by the bankruptcy court and accepted by the district court, are as follows: M.B.I. Business Centers, Inc. ("MBI") was a retailer of consumer computer equipment with 25 retail stores at various locations in the Eastern states. On September 18, 1987, it filed a voluntary petition under chapter 11 of the bankruptcy code. The cases were converted to chapter 7 on December 18, 1987, and defendant Martin Goozman was appointed trustee.

After his appointment as trustee, Goozman hired several of MBI's former employees to assist with the liquidation of MBI's remaining assets. Two of those former employees, Robert Katchmar and his assistant Christine Taylor, were hired to run MBI's main warehouse in Chantilly, Virginia. Their employment was authorized by the bankruptcy court on December 30, 1987.

The conversion to chapter 7 presented the trustee with the question of how to liquidate the remaining assets in order to render the greatest return for the creditors. There were two options: to have a sale or auction at each of the individual locations, or to have one large sale or auction at the main warehouse in Chantilly.

Katchmar was approached by Ralph Kresge, president of a company named PR Logistics, who offered the moving services of his company to help with the liquidation. To prepare an estimate for the cost of the move, Kresge reviewed the inventory lists for the stores.*[1] He made a proposal based upon an estimate 2,000 pounds per store. Relying on household goods tariffs, Ralph Kresge's brother, Paul Kresge, arrived at a cost to move the inventory of $39.25 per 100 pounds. On December 29, 1987, Ralph Kresge submitted an offer to the trustee to move the goods for $785.00 per store for a grand total of $19,625. No mention was made of the $39.25 per 100 pound calculation.

1. "Katchmar and Taylor urged Kresge to go to some of the locations, at least those in the area, to see what was actually there, because they believed the inventory lists were not reliable. He declined to do this and made his estimate based upon the lists.

A cap for the cost of the move was set at $20,000; that cap was later revised to $25,000 at the request of the secured creditors. The proposal was forwarded to Ralph Kresge and he signed it on January 14, 1988. The contract was accompanied by a declaration which stated that PR Logistics was a duly bonded mover. The declaration was signed by Ralph Kresge on January 10, 1988. On January 14, 1988, the court authorized the employment of PR Logistics.

At the time that Ralph Kresge signed the declaration, PR Logistics was not licensed as a broker for transportation nor holder of a certificate or permit as a motor carrier as required by 49 U.S.C. s.10921. Nonetheless, PR Logistics brokered the move. Paul Kresge called Richard Dameron of Denver Moving and Storage Company, Inc. ("Denver Moving") regarding the project, but Dameron declined to handle the move. However, on January 13, 1988, Dameron called Joseph Campbell of plaintiff Campbell's Moving Company, Inc. ("Campbell's"). Dameron and Campbell had a longstanding reciprocal relationship as United Van Lines agents. Campbell initially agreed to do the move for $600 per store based upon the (inaccurately) estimated amount of materials that had to be moved.

Campbell knew within a day or so of January 13, 1988, that the moves were being done for a bankruptcy trustee. Furthermore, Campbell's conclusion that he was hired by the bankruptcy trustee was a result of a phone conversation in which Kresge represented himself as a representative of the trustee. Dameron, however, understood that PR Logistics was to pay Campbell's because he and Campbell had made the arrangements with PR Logistics. Mr. Campbell does not consider that his company was hired by PR Logistics or by Denver Moving. In any event, Campbell's was not directly hired by the trustee.

As the move commenced, it became obvious that the initial cost estimate was far lower than the actual cost of the move. Upon learning this fact, Campbell called Dameron demanding payment per his tariff rate. Dameron relayed this message to Kresge, who assented to the demand. Thereafter, Dameron was no longer involved.

Ralph Kresge was concerned that the amount of material to be shipped exceeded his estimate of 2,000 pounds per store. He therefore contacted and subsequently met with the trustee, Katchmar and Wendelin Lipp, one of the trustee's attorneys, to discuss what actually had to be moved. During this meeting, Kresge assured the trustee and his employees that the cost of the move would not exceed the $25,000 cap, at least not without prior notification. At that time, the trustee was unaware of the $39.25 per 100 pound weight calculation and, furthermore, he was unaware that PR Logistics was not physically doing the move but had instead brokered the operation.

Meanwhile, Campbell's continued to move the assets. By February 11, 1988, Campbell's had incurred $100,000 worth of moving expenses and Campbell began to worry about payment. He called the trustee's office and spoke with Wendelin Lipp, seeking assurance of payment. Lipp told Campbell that the trustee had not hired Campbell's; that the estate would not pay Campbell's; and that Campbell's should seek payment from PR Logistics. She also warned Campbell against seizing the assets in order to ensure payment.

Lipp then called Ralph Kresge of PR Logistics, who assured her that Campbell's was "his problem" and that the cost of the move would not exceed the $25,000 upon which they had originally agreed. Campbell's continued the move and subsequently billed the trustee's office.

The move was massive. Over 300,000 pounds of materials were moved. The trustee sold the goods which were transported to the warehouse and those that were already there for $2,850,000. Following the move, Campbell's sent an invoice to the trustee dated March 3, 1988, for $110,329.26. That price was based upon a discount of 25% off the tariff rate. Later, Campbell's sent another invoice, also dated March 3, 1988, for $149,968.41 for an administrative expense. That price did not include the 25% discount. Subsequently, Campbell's amended its application and now asks for $208,378.50. This figure includes interest and expenses incurred during the pendency of the bankruptcy proceedings.

II.

The bankruptcy court held that Campbell's was entitled to payment for the value of its services to the bankruptcy estate, which the court placed at $100,000. The bankruptcy court declined to award interest, stating that interest on administrative expenses "is available in only the most unusual circumstances, which are not present here. "

The district court reversed the bankruptcy court in part, and held that Campbell's was entitled to only $25,000 as an administrative expense.

The district court first held that Title 11, not Title 49 (which prohibits carriers from charging less than their filed rates) was controlling, reasoning that "[i]f a carrier were permitted to enforce its tariff against a debtor, the priority of equality of distribution to creditors would be frustrated."

The court further held that the carrier was not a "professional person" whose employment required approval of the bankruptcy court.

The court stated that in order to qualify as an administrative expense, the expense must: 1) be actual and necessary; and 2) have benefited the estate and not have been incurred primarily in the interest of the claimant.

The court held:

> The move, if it had cost $25,000, would have been beneficial to the estate. However, a move which cost in excess of $100,000 could only be considered detrimental and an expense which was incurred primarily in the interest of the claimant. Patch Graphics, 58 B.R. at 745 [Bkrtcy. W. D. Wis. 1986]. Accordingly, the $100,000 moving expenses do not qualify as an administrative [expense] under section 503(b)(a)....

...Katchmar and the other MBI employees were agents of the trustee. However, it is significant that the bills of lading were not filled out when signed. Katchmar and the other employees believed that the move would cost a flat fee of $25,000. The fact that the bills of lading were blank substantiated that understanding. Moreover, although Katchmar knew that Campbell's was working with PR Logistics on the move, he was never informed that Campbell's was working under a different agreement than the one originally signed with PR Logistics.

Campbell's services were authorized through agency principles. Indeed, the work Campbell's performed benefited the estate in the same way that PR Logistics' services would have benefited the estate. Therefore, the only solution to this dispute is that the estate should compensate Campbell's for the work performed pursuant to the terms of the agreement signed by PR Logistics. Campbell's is hereby granted > the sum of $25,000 for services performed as an administrative expense....

> ...The terms of that agreement governed the operation of the move from the outset, and cannot be changed in the interim based upon unauthorized acts committed by Ralph Kresge and PR Logistics."

District Court Opinion at 8-12 (footnotes omitted).

III.

We agree with the reasoning and conclusions set forth in the opinion of the district court, and do not believe it necessary to repeat them here.

A few salient facts are worth reiterating, however. Campbell's never contracted with, nor even spoke to, the bankruptcy trustee directly, nor did Campbell's ever inform the trustee or his employees that Campbell's would demand payment of its tariff rate.

Furthermore, Campbell's never sought nor obtained the advance approval of the bankruptcy court.

Campbell's failed to take the steps necessary to insure payment of its tariff rate. Campbell's is not now entitled to an order compelling the trustee to pay more than eight times the price he agreed to pay for the transportation of the assets of the bankruptcy estate.

The decision of the district court is hereby

AFFIRMED.

WIDENER, Circuit Judge, concurs in the result.

OPINION

This appeal and cross-appeal arise from an order entered by the bankruptcy court on August 28, 1989 denying moving service expenses to PR Logistics and allowing an administrative expense of $100,000 to Campbell's Moving Company. The trustee appeals the $100,000 award to Campbell's. Campbell's brings its cross-appeal to recover the total amount requested in its original invoice of $149,968.79.

Appellate jurisdiction is proper in this case pursuant to 28 U.S.C. s.158(a). This court will affirm the findings of fact of the bankruptcy judge unless clearly erroneous, giving due regard to the opportunity of the bankruptcy court to judge the credibility of the witnesses. F.R. Bankr. P. 8013; Lubrizol Enterprises v. Richmond Metal Finishers, 756 F.2d 1043 (4th Cir. 1985). A bankruptcy court's conclusions of law are subject to a de novo review by this court. Caswell v. Lane, 757 F.2d 609 (4th Cir. 1985). No hearing is required to dispose of the issues presented. Local Rule 105.6.

I. STATEMENT OF THE FACTS

The court accepts the statement of facts as found by Judge Nannes of the Bankruptcy Court.[1] M.B.I Business Centers, Inc. ("MBI") was a retailer of consumer computer equipment with 25 retail stores at various locations in the Eastern states. On September 18, 1987 it filed a voluntary petition under chapter 11 of the bankruptcy code. Prodigy Systems, Inc., a wholly owned subsidiary of MBI, also filed a voluntary petition under chapter 11 on October 13, 1987. The cases were converted to chapter 7 on December 18, 1987 and Martin Goozman was appointed trustee.

After his appointment, the trustee hired several of MBI's former employees to assist with the liquidation of the remaining assets. Robert Katchmar and his assistant Christine Taylor were hired to run BMI's main warehouse in Chantilly, Virginia. Their employment was authorized on December 30, 1987.

The conversion to chapter 7 presented the trustee with the question of how to liquidate the remaining assets in order to render the greatest return for the creditors. There were two options: to have a sale or auction at each of the individual locations, or to have one large sale or auction at the main warehouse in Chantilly.

Katchmar was approached by Ralph Kresge, president of PR Logistics, who offered the moving services of his company to help with the liquidation. To prepare an estimate for the move, Kresge reviewed the inventory lists for the various stores.[2] He made a proposal based upon an estimate of 2,000 pounds per store. Relying on household goods tariffs, Ralph Kresge's brother, Paul Kresge, arrived at a cost to move the inventory of $39.25 per 100 pounds. per store for a grand total of $19,625. No mention was made of the $39.25 per 100 pound calculation.

A cap was set at $20,000 which was later revised to $25,000 at the request of the secured creditors. The proposal was forwarded to Ralph Kresge and he signed it on January 14, 1988. The contract was accompanied by a declaration which stated that PR Logistics was a duly bonded mover. The declaration was signed by Ralph Kresge on January 10, 1988. On January 14, 1988 the court authorized the employment of PR Logistics.

At the time that Ralph Kresge signed the declaration, PR Logistics was neither licensed as a broker for transportation nor issued a certificate or permit as a motor carrier as required by 49 U.S.C. s.10921. Nonetheless, PR Logistics brokered the move. Paul Kresge called Richard Dameron of Denver Moving and Storage Company, Inc. ("Denver Moving") regarding the project but Dameron declined the offer. However, on January 13, 1988 Dameron called Joseph Campbell of Campbell's Moving Company, Inc. ("Campbell's"). Dameron and Campbell had a longstanding reciprocal relationship as United Van Lines agents. Campbell initially agreed to do the move for $600 per store based upon the estimated amount of materials that had to be moved.

Campbell knew that the moves were being done for a bankruptcy trustee within a day or so of January 13, 1988. (T3 P60 L4-22). Further, Campbell concluded that he was hired by the bankruptcy trustee as a result of a phone conversation when Kresge represented himself as a representative of the trustee. (T3 P47 L6 - P48 L22). Dameron, however, understood that PR Logistics was to pay Campbell's because he and Campbell had made the arrangements with PR Logistics. (T3 P118 L20 - P120 L6). Mr. Campbell does not consider that his company was hired by PR Logistics or Denver Moving. In any event, Campbell's was not hired by the trustee (T3 P202 L16-18).

As the move commenced, it became obvious that the initial cost estimate was far less than what was actually true. Upon learning this, Campbell called Dameron demanding payment per his tariff. Dameron relayed this message to Kresge, who assented to the demand. Thereafter, Dameron was no longer involved.

Ralph Kresge was concerned that the amount of material to be shipped exceeded his estimate of 2,000 pounds per store. He therefore contacted and subsequently met with the trustee, Katchmar and Wendelin Lipp, one of the trustee's attorneys, to discuss what actually had to be moved. During this meeting, Kresge assured the trustee and his employees that the cost of the move would not exceed the $25,000 cap: certainly not without prior notification. At that time, the trustee was unaware of the $39.25 per 100 pound weight calculation and furthermore, he was completely unaware that PR Logistics was not physically doing the move but had brokered the operation.

Meanwhile, Campbell's continued to move the assets. By February 11, 1988 Campbell's had incurred $100,000 worth of moving expenses and Campbell began to worry about payment. He called the trustee's office and spoke with Wendelin Lipp, seeking assurance of payment. Lipp told Campbell that the trustee did not hire Campbell's, that the estate would not pay Campbell's, and that Campbell's should seek payment from PR Logistics. Lipp then called Ralph Kresge who assured her that Campbell's was "his problem " and also that the cost of the move would not exceed the $25,000 as they had originally agreed. Campbell's continued the move and subsequently billed the trustee's office.

The move was massive. Over 300,000 pounds of materials were moved. The trustee sold the goods which were transported to the warehouse, and those that were already there for $2,850,000. Following the move, Campbell's sent an invoice to the trustee dated March 3, 1988 for $110,329.26 based upon a discount of 25% off the tariff rate. Subsequently, Campbell's sent another invoice, also dated March 3, 1988 for $149,968.41 for an administrative expense which does not include the 25% discount. Subsequently, Campbell's amended its application and now asks for $208,378.50. This figure includes interest and expenses incurred during the pendency of the bankruptcy proceedings.

This matter was properly before the bankruptcy court under Title 11 as determined by that court. Further, this court agrees with the bankruptcy court's holding that Title 11, not Title 49, controls this action. It is well established that bankruptcy fundamentally alters relationships. See, Commodity Futures Trading Commission v. Weintraub, 471 U.S. 343 (1985). If a carrier were permitted to enforce its tariff against a debtor, the priority of equality of distribution to creditors would be frustrated. See, In re Roll Form Products, Inc., 662 F.2d 150 (2d Cir. 1981); In re Penn-Dixie Steel Corp., 6 B.R. 817 (B.C. S.D.N.Y. 1980), aff'd 10 B.R. 878 (S.D.N.Y. 1981).

Section 327(a) of the bankruptcy code requires court approval before hiring professional persons. That section provides in part:

> Except as otherwise provided in this section, the trustee, with the court's approval, may employ one or more attorneys, accountants, appraisers, auctioneers, or other professional persons, that do not hold or represent > an interest adverse to the estate, and that are disinterested persons, to represent or assist the trustee in carrying out the trustee's duties under this title.

Although the Bankruptcy Code does not define the term "professional person, " numerous courts have. The court in In re Johns-Manville Corp., found that the phrase "professional persons " "is a term of art reserved for those persons who play an intimate role in the reorganization of a debtor's estate." 60 B.R. 612, 619 (Bkrtcy. S.D.N.Y. 1986). In the often cited case of In re Seatrain Lines, Inc., 13 B.R. 980, 981 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1981), the court held "[f]or the purposes of section 327(a), 'professional person' is limited to persons in those occupations which play a central role in the administration of the debtor proceeding." In In re Fretheim, the court held that a qualitative analysis must be used to determine whether the employed person falls into the category of professional persons. In particular, the court should consider whether the employee was given a great deal of discretion or autonomy. In re Fretheim, 102 B.R. 298, 299 (Bkrtcy. D.Conn. 1989).

Campbell's was not given any discretion or autonomy in this case. Each move was directed by Katchmar. Furthermore, the employees located at each store instructed the movers as to which items needed to be moved. Campbell's did not exercise its own authority nor did it make any decisions in connection with the move. The court agrees with Judge Wannes's opinion that "neither party acted professionally in any sense of the word, either as a term of art or otherwise." Memorandum of Decision at 16. Therefore, Campbell's was not employed as a professional person requiring prior court approval under section 327(a).

Secondly, the trustee asks the court to find that the amount due Campbell's is an administrative expense and therefore requires notice and a hearing under 503(b)(1). 11 U. S .C. s.503 (b)(1)(A) states in part:

> (b) After notice and a hearing, there shall be allowed administrative expenses, other than claims allowed under section 502(f) of this title, including -
> (1)(A) the actual, necessary costs and expenses of preserving the estate, including wages, salaries, or conmissions for services rendered after the commencement of the case.

There are two determinative factors for an administrative expense. First, the expense must be actual and necessary. Second, the expense must not be incurred primarily in the interest of the claimant and must have benefitted the bankruptcy estate. In re Patch Graphics, 58 B. R. 743, 745

(Bkrtcy. W.D. Wis. 1986). The court in Patch Graphics stated that very large expenditure items are invariably treated as an administrative expense. "However, the tenor of the cases suggest that items supplied to the estate must be essential for the preservation of the estate." Id. at 745.

Campbell's argues that the services performed were actual and necessary. Further, it argues that the services benefitted the estate. (Appellee's brief at 17-18.) This court is unconvinced that a moving expenditure totalling nearly 20% of the total amount of money collected is beneficial to the estate. The trustee had made an agreement with PR Logistics to move the assets of the estate based upon the cost estimate of $25,000. The move, if it had cost $25,000, would have been beneficial to the estate. However, a move which cost in excess of $100,000 could only be considered detrimental and an expense which was incurred primarily in the interest of the claimant. Patch Graphics, 58 B.R. at 745. Accordingly, the $100,000 moving expenses do not qualify as an administrative under section 503(b)(a).[3]

The record in the bankruptcy court includes bills of lading which were signed by representatives of the trustee at both ends of the move. The former BMI employees opened each store for the mover, instructed the mover as to what they were to pack and move, and signed the bill of lading. The bills of lading were signed at all but seven locations. (T3 P14 L1-5). The bills had Campbell's name at the top. Significantly, however, the bills of lading did not indicate the charges incurred by the move nor the tariff rate.

---

3. As further discussed below, Campbell's is entitled to $25,000 as an administrative expense.

If the employees were acting as agents of the trustee at the time that the bills of lading were signed, the trustee is bound by those actions with respect to Campbell's. Therefore, the court must consider whether Katchmar and the other employees were agents of the trustee.

An agent's authority comes from the principal. Progressive Casualty Insurance v. Ehrhardt, 518 A.2d 151, 155 (Md. App. 1986). The agency relationship results when "a person authorizes another to act on his behalf subject to his control and the other consents to do so." Smith v. Jenkins, 452 A.2d 333, 335 (D.C.App. 1982). Further, where an agent is unauthorized to act, but the principal with knowledge of the act acquires and permits the agent to do similar acts, the past unauthorized act is ratified.

Lewis v. Washington Metropolitan Area Transit Authority, 463 A. 2d 666, 671 (D.C. App. 1983).

In addition authority may either be actual or apparent. Id. The apparent authority doctrine has been summarized as "one who knowingly permits another to act for him as though authorized, inducing third persons to rely to their disadvantage on the seeming authority, is estopped from later asserting the lack of authority of his apparent agent. Progressive Casualty, 518 A.2d at 155 (citations omitted).

In this case, Goozman hired Katchmar and other former BMI employees to work for the bankruptcy estate. Katchmar, in his capacity as an agent of the trustee, coordinated the moving process associated with the liquidation. Katchmar was aware from the beginning that Campbell's was moving BMI's products and that PR Logistics was not. (T2 P64 L8-17). Katchmar orchestrated the move and permitted the bills of lading to be signed by the employees of the estate. Katchmar and the other employees were acting under the control of the trustee, for the benefit of the trustee and the estate, and had the power to alter legal relations of the trustee, thereby satisfying the agency test. Proctor v. Holden, 540 A. 2d 133, 142, 75 Md. App. 1 (1988) (citations omitted).

The court holds that Katchmar and the other BMI employees were agents of the trustee. However, it is significant that the bills of lading were not filled out when signed. Katchmar and the other employees believed that the move would cost a flat fee of $25,000. The fact that the bills of lading were blank substantiated that understanding. Moreover, although Katchmar knew that Campbell's was working with PR Logistics on the move, he was never informed that Campbell's was working under a different agreement than the one originally signed with PR Logistics.

Campbell's services were authorized through agency principles. Indeed, the work Campbell's performed benefitted the estate in the same way that PR Logistics' services would have benefitted the estate. Therefore, the only solution to this dispute is that the estate should compensate Campbell's for the work performed pursuant to the terms of the agreement signed by PR Logistics. Campbell's is hereby granted the sum of $25,000 for services performed as an administrative expense.[4]

4. The record is unclear as to whether PR Logistics has received compensation in the amount of $19,686.00. If they have received that sum, Campbell's should recover those funds from PR Logistics and $5,314.00 from the bankruptcy estate.

Because Campbell's moving services in the amount of $25,000 were actual and necessary, and beneficial to the estate, and because a hearing was held to authorize a $25,000 administrative expense, Campbell's is allowed $25,000.

D

In Campbell's cross-appeal, it argues that it should be paid per its tariff, plus interest and costs during the pendency of the litigation. The amount Campbell's requests is $208,378.50. However, Campbell's did not supply any evidence to show that Campbell's participated with the tariffs.[5] In addition, Campbell's has submitted the United States Supreme Court case of Maislin Industries, U.S., Inc. v. Primary Steel, Inc., slip op. no 89-624 (June 21, 1990) as authority for its position. That case is distinguishable from the present case and is therefore inapplicable.

5. Campbell's motion to supplement the record with Tariff No. 101-C, ICC HGB 101-C is denied pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 52(b).

III. CONCLUSION

The bankruptcy court's decision to award Campbell's request for moving expenses is affirmed in part and amended in part. Campbell's shall be awarded $25,000 pursuant to the terms of the contract signed by PR Logistics. The terms of that agreement governed the operation of the move from the outset, and cannot be changed in the interim based upon unauthorized acts committed by Ralph Kresge and PR Logistics. The court' s decision on the trustee's appeal disposes of the issues raised in the cross-appeal.

A separate order will be entered in accordance with this opinion.

MEMORANDUM OF DECISION
(Applications for Administrative Expense)

Before the court are applications for administrative expense filed by Campbell's Moving Company, Inc. ("Campbell's") and PR Logistics, Ltd. ("PR Logistics"). Both applications relate to moving expenses incurred in consolidating debtor's assets located at its stores to a warehouse in Chantilly, Virginia. The trustee, Martin L. Goozman, opposes both applications. For the reasons contained herein, the court will allow compensation to Campbell's and deny compensation to PR Logistics.

FACTS

This case was commenced by a voluntary petition under Chapter 11 filed by M.B.I. Business Centers, Inc. ("MBI") on September 18, 1987. Debtor was a retailer of consumer computer equipment which it sold at numerous stores from Boston to Atlanta. Prodigy Systems, Inc., a wholly owned subsidiary of MBI, filed its petition on October 13, 1987. On December 18, 1987, the court converted the cases to cases under Chapter 7. The trustee was appointed in both cases on December 23, 1987.

At the time of the conversion, debtor had been operating 22 retail stores as well as three stores located on General Services Administration premises. The stores on government property were known as office technology plus (OTP) centers. Two of the retail stores, at Waltham, Massachusetts, and Edison, New Jersey, also served as distribution centers, and the contents of closed stores had been collected there.

After his appointment, the trustee, moved swiftly to hire debtor's former employees to assist in liquidating the remaining assets. Among those were Robert Katchmar and his assistant, Christine Taylor, who ran the Chantilly warehouse and controlled the inventory stored there. The court authorized their employment on December 30, 1987.

Shortly before the conversion, IBM engaged PR Logistics to establish a bonded warehouse at Chantilly to control its collateral supplied to MBI. The conversion of the case rendered this operation pointless. Ralph Kresge, president of PR Logistics, thereupon approached Robert Katchmar to offer his company's services in liquidating debtor's assets.

In order to formulate a proposal to the trustee, Ralph Kresge reviewed debtor's inventory lists, such as they were, with Katchmar and Taylor. Katchmar and Taylor knew that only the inventory list for the Chantilly warehouse was accurate and that inventory lists for the 25 retail locations were dubious at best. They told Kresge that the inventory lists could not be relied upon. Nonetheless, Kresge concluded that the 25 retail centers contained an average of 2,000 pounds of inventory. Kresge clung to this conclusion, despite the trustee's subsequent invitation to visit nearby stores to determine their actual contents. Kresge declined the offer. Ralph Kresge had his brother, Paul, price the proposal based on the 2,000 pound per store figure. Relying on household goods tariffs, Paul Kresge arrived at a cost to move the inventory of $39.25 per 100 pounds, or $785 per ton.

Ralph Kresge presented the trustee, with a handwritten and a typed proposals, both dated December 29, 1987. The proposals were the same except the typed proposal contained a breakdown of costs for the services proposed. The proposal offered to move product from the 25 centers to the Chantilly warehouse for $785 per center or $19,625 total. Additionally, PR Logistics offered to coordinate the liquidation of debtor's assets.

The trustee was only interested in PR Logistics' offer to move the inventory inasmuch as he had already hired debtor's former employees to coordinate the liquidation. Since the conversion of the case, the trustee in concert with the secured creditors had pondered whether it would be wiser to liquidate the inventory piecemeal from each retail location or to consolidate the inventory and dispose of it through a single sale. The PR Logistics' proposal made the latter course feasible and more attractive than piecemeal liquidation. Had the trustee known the true cost of the move, he would not have consolidated the assets.

All agreed that PR Logistics was to move the inventory, demonstration computer equipment, and office equipment at the 22 stores. The fixtures and furniture were not to be moved since this consisted for the most part of particleboard furnishings used to display the inventory and was largely without value. These furnishings would only be of value to potential purchasers of IBM distribution rights possessed by debtor. Additionally, PR Logistics was to move everything in the three OTP centers and the Waltham and Edison distribution centers.

The trustee prepared an application to employ PR Logistics to move each store for $785 and to move the contents of a second warehouse in Chantilly for a total of up to $20,000. The trustee later revised the cap figure to $25,000 at a secured creditor's suggestion. The application stated that each store on average contained $110,000 in assets. The trustee forwarded the application and a copy of the proposed order to Ralph Kresge along with the following declaration which Kresge signed:

Declaration of Mover

I, PR Logistics Ltd. by R.A. Kresge, declare as follows:

1. That I am a duly bonded mover competent to perform the services proposed in the Trustee's application for my employment.

2. That I have read the Application of the Trustee to employ me and I agree to and approve all of the terms and conditions thereof.

3. I am a disinterested person within the meaning of 11 U.S.C. Section 101(13).

I declare under penalty of perjury that the foregoing is true and correct.

PR Logistics, Ltd.
Dated: 1/10/88
By: Ralph A. Kresge /S/

On January 14, 1988, the court authorized the employment of PR Logistics.

At this time PR Logistics was neither licensed as a broker for transportation nor issued a certificate or permit as a motor carrier as 49 U.S.C. s.10921 requires. Nonetheless, PR Logistics brokered the move. Paul Kresge called Richard Dameron of Denver Moving & Storage Company, Inc. ("Denver Moving") and inquired whether it could handle the proposed moves for $500 or $600 per store. Dameron informed Kresge that Denver Moving could not perform the move since it was outside Denver Moving's authorized area. However, on January 13, 1988, Dameron called Joseph Campbell of Campbell's Moving Company, Inc., to refer the business. Campbell and Dameron had a long-standing reciprocal relationship as United Van Lines agents. Campbell said he could do the job for $600 per store.

Campbell knew of PR Logistics involvement from the start of the transaction.

Campbell's commenced work on January 21, 1988, by moving the Atlanta retail store and OTP center. Upon learning that the load far exceeded 4,000 pounds, Campbell called Dameron and insisted upon being paid per his tariff. Dameron relayed the information to Paul Kresge who assented to the demand. Dameron thereafter dropped from the picture.

Ralph Kresge became concerned that the amount of material being shipped exceeded his estimate of 2,000 pounds per store. He met with the trustee and Wendelin Lipp, one of the trustee's attorneys, on January 27, 1988. They discussed what exactly was to be moved. Katchmar and Allen Ashforth, another of debtor's former employees whom the trustee had hired to help in the liquidation, participated via telephone. The parties agreed that the entire contents of the OTP centers and the stores at Waltham, Edison, and Bensalem, Pennsylvania, were to be moved. At the other retail stores, inventory, demonstration equipment, office supplies and equipment, business records, copiers, postage meters, facsimile machines, and overhead projectors were to be moved. Kresge assured the trustee that the specified move would cost $25,000 or less. He never mentioned that PR Logistics would charge $39.25 per 100 pounds for the move.

Campbell's continued moving the stores. One of the debtor's former employees retained by the trustee would open a store, indicate what had to be moved, and sign the bill of lading. The load would be delivered to Chantilly where Katchmar or Taylor would sign the bill of lading acknowledging delivery. At this time, no charges were on the bills of lading. Katchmar coordinated the move with Campbell's, scheduling the timing of the moves and arranging to have the stores opened.

Katchmar knew that Campbell's was performing the moves instead of PR Logistics. Katchmar had also known that PR Logistics did not intend to perform the move when it had submitted its proposal. Yet Katchmar never told the trustee any of this information. However, Katchmar had not been involved in PR Logistics' proposal negotiations with the trustee.

Approximately two-thirds through the move, Joseph Campbell became concerned that his firm might not get paid. Paul Kresge had been pressing Campbell's for invoicing information, and Campbell had been evasive as to what the charges would be. Joseph Campbell queried Katchmar and learned the trustee's telephone number. Campbell called the trustee's office on February 11, 1988, and spoke with Wendelin Lipp stating that Campbell's had performed $100,000 worth of work and sought assurance of payment. Lipp informed Campbell that the trustee had not hired his company and that Campbell's would have to look to PR Logistics for remuneration. Campbell's never billed PR Logistics. Campbell's never contacted the trustee again until billing him, but continued with the move.

After speaking with Campbell, Lipp called PR Logistics and spoke with Paul Kresge, who disavowed any knowledge of Campbell's. Ralph Kresge returned Lipp's call and told her not to worry, that Campbell's was his responsibility, that the move was progressing nicely, and that the job would not cost more than $25,000. Lipp and the trustee let the matter lie. The trustee never contacted Katchmar and asked what was going on. Katchmar continued to coordinate the move, which concluded on February 25, 1988.

The move was massive. Over 300,000 pounds of goods were moved. A large portion of this weight is attributable to particleboard furniture moved from the Waltham and Edison distribution centers.

The trustee was able to sell debtor's assets, consisting of the moved goods and the goods already present at Chantilly, for $2,850,000. Of that price, $25,000 was allocable to the furniture.

PR Logistics sent the trustee an invoice dated February 11, 1988, for $19,686, corresponding to the proposal. The trustee paid the bill. PR Logistics then sent an invoice dated March 21, 1988, seeking $131,840.77 based on a rate of $39.25 per 100 pounds moved. This is the sum sought in PR Logistics' application for administrative expense.

Campbell's sent the trustee an invoice dated March 3, 1988, for $110,329.26 based on a 25% discount on the tariff rate as calculated by Campbell's. Subsequently, Campbell's sent the trustee another invoice also dated March 3, 1988, for $149.968.41, which does not include the discount. The second sum was sought in Campbell's application for administrative expense. Campbell's has since amended its application asking $208,378.50, which includes interest and expenses incurred during the pendency of the proceeding.

The court consolidated the hearing of the two applications. All parties extensively briefed the matter.

DISCUSSION

The trustee asserts that Campbell's is a professional person whose employment the court did not authorize and should not authorize nunc pro tunc. As such, Campbell's is an officious intermeddler and should not be compensated. The trustee further argues that PR Logistics has been fully paid for the value of its services.

PR Logistics also urges that Campbell's is an officious intermeddler. However, PR Logistics would have the court pay it in full so that it can in turn pay Campbell's.

Campbell's states that it is entitled to payment at full tariff pursuant to 49 U.S.C. s10761(a), which states:

> s.10761. Transportation prohibited without tariff.
> (a) Except as provided in this subtitle, a carrier providing transportation or service subject to the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission under chapter 105 of this title shall provide that transportation or service only if the rate for the transportation or service is contained in a tariff that is in effect under this subchapter. That carrier may not charge or receive a different compensation for that transportation or service than the rate specified in the tariff whether by returning a part of that rate to a person, giving a person a privilege, > allowing the use of a facility that affects the value of that transportation or service, or another device.

This provision is known as the filed rate doctrine. Campbell's argues that filed rate doctrine admits of no exceptions and that the dictates of 49 U.S.C. s.10101 et seq. override the provisions of the Bankruptcy Code.

This case illustrates the saw about never buying a pig in a poke. The trustee had the pig, that is, debtor's assets of an undetermined scope scattered across the Atlantic Coast. PR Logistics bought the unseen pig assuming it to be a piglet. But the wee little pig turned out to be a great boar borne by Campbell's. Now Campbell's comes seeking to render the hog into meat for its larder through the sausage grinder of Title 49.

Preliminarily, the court notes that the applications for administrative expense are core proceedings under 28 U.S.C.

s.157(b)(2)(A). Additionally, the matters are contested as embraced by Fed.R.Bankr.P. 9014. By virtue of Campbell's position, however, s.157(d) would have been applicable. Section 157(d) states:

> (d) This district court may withdraw, in whole or in part, any case or proceeding referred under this section, on its own motion or on timely motion of any party, for cause shown. The district court shall, on timely motion of a party, so withdraw a proceeding if the court determines that resolution of the proceeding requires, consideration of both title 11 and other laws of the United States regulating organizations or activities affecting interstate commerce.

This appears to be a matter requiring consideration of both Title 11 and Title 49. In re Maislin Indus., U.S., Inc., 50 BR 943, 947 (BC E.D. Mich. 1985) ("withdrawal is required only when resolution of the proceeding requires substantial consideration of both.") However, Local Bankruptcy Rule 54.A(2)(c) requires:

> (c) Withdrawal of Reference of Adversary Proceeding or Contested Matter.
>
> A motion to withdraw an adversary proceeding or a contested matter which has been referred to the Bankruptcy Court must be filed by the earlier of five (5) days before the date scheduled for the first hearing on the merits and;
> (i) in the case of an adversary proceeding, within twenty (20) days after the last pleading is permitted to be filed pursuant to Bankruptcy Rule 7012; or
> (ii) in the case of a contested matter, within twenty (20) days after the last memorandum is permitted to be filed pursuant to Local Bankruptcy Rule 30(b)(4).

No motion to withdraw the matter having been filed, the proceeding is properly before this court.

The court also notes that the applications are before this court pursuant to 11 U.S.C. s.503(b)(1)(A), which states:

> 503. Allowance of administrative expenses.
>
> (b) After notice and a hearing, there shall be allowed administrative expenses, other than claims allowed under section 502(f) of this title, including -
> (1)(A) the actual, necessary costs and expenses of preserving the estate, including wages, salaries, or commissions for services rendered after the commencement of the case.

Campbell's application is not made pursuant to 49 U.S.C. s.10761 or s.11903 as Campbell's has intimated. Jurisdiction of matters brought under Title 49 lies with the district court pursuant to 28 U.S.C. 1337. Thurston Motor Lines, Inc. v. Jordan K. Rand, Ltd., 460 U.S. 533 (1983); Madler v. Artoe, 494 F.2d 323 (7th Cir. 1974). This court's jurisdiction is founded on 28 U.S.C. s.1334 and Rule 51 of the Rules of the United States District Court for the District of Maryland. Why Campbell's did not bring an action in district court, this court cannot surmise. Certainly it may have done so. 11 U.S.C. s.323; 28 U.S.C. s.959. Nonetheless, here the matter rests.

In the context of an application for administrative expense, the provisions of Title 49 do not take precedence over those of Title 11. The filed rate doctrine, despite Campbell's exhortations to the contrary, is not absolute. Certainly, the court recognizes the authority descending from Louisville & N.R.R. Co. v. Maxwell, 237 U.S. 94 (1915) that deviation from a filed tariff is impermissible. However, the Supreme Court has also noted that bankruptcy fundamentally alters relationships. See Commodity Futures Trading Comm'n v. Weintraub, 471 U.S. 343 (1985). A carrier cannot enforce its tariff against a debtor since so doing would frustrate the priority of an equality of distribution to creditors. See In re Roll Form Products, Inc., 662 F.2d 150 (2d Cir. 1981); In re Penn-Dixie Steel Corp., 6 BR 817 (BC S.D.N.Y. 1980), aff'd 10 BR 878 (S.D.N.Y 1981).

Even within the sphere of Title 49, the filed rate doctrine is not absolute; it is subject to the standard of reasonableness provided by 49 U.S.C. s.10701(a), which states:

> s.10701. Standards for rates, classifications, through routes, rules, and practices.
> (a) A rate (other than a rail rate) classification, rule, or practice related to transportation or service provided by a carrier subject to the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission under chapter 105 of this title must be reasonable. A through route established by such a carrier (including a rail carrier) > must be reasonable. Divisions of joint rates by those carriers (including rail carriers) must be made without unreasonable discrimination against a participating carrier and must be reasonable.

The Interstate Commerce Commission has announced its policy to review, on reference from a court, unreasonable practices or motor carriers respecting unfiled negotiated tariffs: "We believe, in the highly competitive motor carrier industry and economy in general, equitable defenses to rigid application of filed tariff rates should be available on a case-by-case basis and that our unreasonable practice jurisdiction authorizes such an approach. " National Industrial Transportation League- Petition to Institute Rulemaking on Negotiated Motor Common Carrier Rates, 3 I.C.C.2d 99 (1986). The ICC policy has sparked opinion pro, Maislin Indus., U.S. Inc. v. Primary Steel, Inc., 1989 U.S. App. Lexis 10205 (8th Cir. July 17, 1989);

In re Breman's Express Co., 92 BR 636 (BC W.D, Pa. 1988); and opinion con In re Campbell Sixty Six Express, Inc., 94 BR 1019 (BC W.D. Mo. 1988); In re Carolina Motor Express, Inc., 84 BR 979 (BC W.D.N.C. 1988). The relevance of this debate here is that it convinces the court that the filed rate doctrine is not as unassailable as Campbell's urges.

Campbell's argument is smoke and mirrors in the context of an administrative fee application. At bottom, this proceeding has been a tri-cornered exercise in finger-pointing with no party totally free from blame. The trustee should have kept closer tabs on the move and his employees. PR Logistics should have done due diligence and not misrepresented its capacity. Campbell's should have made clear on what basis it would bill and ceased working when it clearly had no authority to continue. But the matter cannot be decided on the basis of what should have happened.

The trustee in the exercise of his business judgment decided to consolidate debtor's assets. Whether he would have done so had he known the actual scope of the move is irrelevant. The trustee informed the court of his decision by seeking authority to employ a mover, and the court ordered such authority. Where a trustee acts under order of the court, the trustee is not liable for a mistake in judgment, only for acts of negligence. Yadkin Valley Bank & Trust Co. v. McGee, 819 F.2d 74 (4th Cir. 1987).

The trustee and PR Logistics would have the court find Campbell's to be a professional person as envisaged by 11 U.S.C. s.327(a), which states:

> s.327. Employment of professional persons.
> (a) Except as otherwise provided in this section, the trustee, with the court's approval, may employ one or > more attorneys, accountants, appraisers, auctioneers, or other professional persons, that do not hold or represent an interest adverse to the estate, and that are disinterested persons, to represent or assist the trustee in carrying out the trustee's duties under this title.

As a professional person, Campbell's application would be entertained pursuant to 11 U.S.C. s.330(a), which states:

> s.330. Compensation of officers.
> (a) After notice to any parties in interest and to the United States trustee and a hearing, and subject to sections 326, 328, and 329 of this title, the court may award to a trustee, to an examiner, to a professional person employed under section 327 or 1103 of this title, or to the debtor's attorney -
> (1) reasonable compensation for actual, necessary services rendered by such trustee, examiner, professional person, or > attorney, as the case may be, and by any para-professional persons employed by such trustee, professional person, or attorney, as the case may be, based on the nature, the extent, and the value of such services, the time spent on such services, and the cost of comparable services other than in a case under this title; and

> (2) reimbursement for actual, necessary expenses.

The court notes that PR Logistics' fee application was made solely under s.503(b)(1). Compensation awarded under s.330(a) is considered an administrative expense under s.503(b)(2), which states:

> (b) After notice and a hearing, there shall be allowed administrative expenses, other than claims allowed under section 502(f) of this title, including -
> (2) compensation and reimbursement awarded under section 330(a) of this title.

Administrative expenses allowed under s.503(b) are given first priority by s.507(a)(1).

A professional person whose employment is not authorized by the court is not entitled to compensation and is considered an officious intermeddler. In re Carolina Sales Corp., 45 BR 750, 751 (BC E.D.N.C. 1985). The reason for such a strict rule is to allow the court to control the burdening of the estate. Id. at 753; In re Ohio River Steel Corp., 65 BR 92, 94 (BC W.D. Ky. 1986). An unauthorized professional may of course be employed nunc pro tunc in extraordinary circumstances.

An often-cited definition of a professional person is found in the case of In re Seatrain Lines, Inc., 13 BR 980, 981 (BC S.D.N.Y. 1981):

> For the purposes of section 327(a), "professional person" is limited to persons in those occupations which play a central role in the administration of the debtor proceeding. Court approval is > required for the retention of attorneys, accountants, appraisers, auctioneers and persons in other professions intimately involved in the administration of the debtor's estate.

An elaboration of the same standard is found in the case of In re Frederick Petroleum Corp., 75 BR 774 (BC S.D. Ohio 1987):

> Persons who offer services normally performed by professionals, such as appraisers or management consultants, have been designated as professionals, while persons who are involved in the mechanics of a debtor's business have been found not to be within that category of persons. Factors considered by the courts involve not only the nature of the services performed, but also the effect of such person's services upon the administration of the bankruptcy case, and how central that role is to the reorganization proceedings. (Citations omitted).

The trustee and PR Logistics seek to put the court in an untenable position. That is, since PR Logistics' employment was authorized by the court, Campbell's employment must also be authorized by the court. The court disagrees. The authorization of PR Logistics' employment sought by the trustee was a belt-and-suspenders approach to limit trustee's liability. Neither PR Logistics nor Campbell's is a professional person. Moreover, neither party acted professionally in any sense of the word, either as a term of art or otherwise.

The court has found no authority to consider a carrier as a professional person. Courts have added other professionals to list found in s.327(a) of attorneys, accountants, appraisers, and auctioneers; for example, in the case of real estate brokers, In re Cummins, 8 BR 701 (BC C.D.Cal. 1981), rev'd on other grounds, 15 BR 893 (BAP 9th Cir.); In re McConnell, 82 BR 43 (BC S.D.Tex. 1987).

Although the services of a carrier were essential to the trustee's administration in liquidating debtor's assets, the court cannot characterize that role as central. The services rendered were ministerial and involved no exercise of discretion. Organizing, coordinating, and directing the effort fell to Robert Katchmar, not to Campbell's or PR Logistics. Therefore, the court will consider the applications under the standards of s.503(b)(1)(A), which provide:

> s.503. Allowance of administrative expenses.
>
> (b) After notice and a hearing, there shall be allowed administrative expenses, other than claims allowed under section 502(f) of this title, including -
> (1) (A) the actual, necessary costs and expenses of preserving the estate, including wages, salaries, or commissions for services rendered after the commencement of the case.

This is a two-part standard: The services must have been actual and necessary, and the services must have preserved the estate. The standard was described in detail in the case of In re Patch Graphics, 58 BR 743, 745-46 (BC W.D. Wis. 1986):

> An administrative expense may not be allowed absent a finding that the expense is necessary for preserving the estate. In re Club Development & Management Corp., 27 B.R. 610, 612 (Bankr.App. 9th Cir. 1982); In Re Rhymes, Inc., 14 B.R. 807, 808 (Bankr.D.Conn. 1981). Since an administrative expense constitutes a priority claim any recovery must be subject to strict scrutiny by the court. Priority statutes are strictly construed. Standard Oil Company v. Kurtz, 330 F.2d 178, 180 (8th Cir. 1964). The burden of proof is upon the party seeking an administrative claim. See Woods v. City Nat. Bank & Trust Co., 312 U.S. 262, 268, 61 S.Ct. 493, 497, 85 L.Ed. 820 (1941). The terms "actual" and "necessary" contained in 11 U.S.C.

s.503(b)(1)(A) must be narrowly construed in order to keep administrative expenses at a minimum and thus preserve the estate for the benefit of all creditors. In Re O.P.M. Leasing Services, Inc., 23 B.R. 104, 121 (Bankr.S.D.N.Y. 1982); see Otte v. United States, 419 U.S. 43, 53, 95 S.Ct. 247, 254, 42 L.Ed.2d 212 (1974). It is not sufficient merely to show that the debtor exercised "business judgment" in order to support a claim under section 503(b)(1). See Club Development, 27 B.R. at 612. In the present case a mere showing that the equipment in question was purchased as a result of reasonable and prudent business judgment is insufficient. A showing that the equipment was necessary to preserve the estate would also be required. Furthermore, claims under section 503(b)(1)(A) are judged by the actual value received by the estate and not the cost incurred by the creditor. See In Re California Steel Company, 24 B.R. 185, 188 (Bankr.N.D.Ill. 1982); In re Rhymes, Inc., 14 B.R. at 808.

The court has no trouble finding that consolidating debtor's assets was an actual, necessary expense of preserving the estate. Determining the actual value to the estate is more troublesome.

As to Campbell's, the court has reviewed the invoices presented and finds them overstated compared to the value that accrued to the estate. Campbell's performed a great deal of work to move what was essentially worthless furniture. As previously stated, the court is unmoved by the filed rate doctrine. But even if it were, Campbell's has failed to prove the charges claimed. The court has no way to know whether the tariff placed in evidence, ICC HGB 400-E, applies to Campbell's; Tariff No. 101-C, ICC HGB 101-C, showing the carriers to which HGB 400-E applies, was not put in evidence. As nearly as the court can tell, the tariff in evidence was not precisely followed, at least as to the cost of containers and packing rates.

In any case, the court finds the value of Campbell's services to be $100,000. As to Campbell's claim for interest on its administrative expense, the court notes that interest is available in only the most unusual circumstances, which are not present here. See In re International Airways, Inc., 77 BR 490 (BC E.D. Pa. 1987).

As to PR Logistics, the court finds its services provided to be of no value to the estate. Nothing that PR Logistics did benefitted the estate. PR Logistics is largely responsible for this debacle. Ralph Kresge blindly walked into a deal without knowing what he was getting and without the capacity to do anything about it. He misrepresented himself to the trustee and this court, set into motion an unfortunate chain of events, then has the temerity to request payment to boot. The court will refuse to allow any payment and will order disgorgement of those fees already paid.

Many issues remain unresolved: whether Campbell's may sue the trustee for undercharges in district court; whether Campbell's acted reasonably; whether Campbell's will further threaten anyone with the Elkins Act in this matter; whether the trustee is liable to creditors for any negligence; whether the trustee has any cause of action against PR Logistics. None of those issues are properly before this court now. The court does not look forward to hearing any more of this matter.

Orders will be entered in accordance with the foregoing.
